FATHERS

While I was in the middle of convincing my mother that I needed to take off and play with my friends, Pop showed up. As I write these words, I am vividly remembering and reliving that moment.

My mother said to my father, "Crawford, CW (my childhood nickname) is only twelve years old, and he doesn't need to be here with us all day. He needs to be enjoying himself with his friends."

Then my father said, "Sylvia, I got this. That boy one day is going to be somebody's husband and somebody's father. There are going to be people depending on him. He has got to learn how to do what he has to do and not what he wants to do."
